U.S., Japan Reach Compromise On Return of Okinawa in 1972

By James Goldsborough

PARIS, June 9 (UPI).—The United States and Japan today agreed to a compromise plan for the return of Okinawa to Japan and announced that the reversion treaty will be signed June 17.

This month make it difficult to discuss trade concessions at this point. U.S. sources said that the United States is putting off any political decision on Chinese representation in the United Nations until later this summer.

The treaty, which will be signed simultaneously in ceremonies in Washington and Tokyo televised live by satellite, must be ratified by two thirds of the American Senate to become law.

Kosygin Says Russia Will Reduce Europe Forces If NATO 'Sincere'

MOSCOW, June 9 (UPI).—Premier Alexei N. Kosygin said today the Soviet Union is willing to reduce its armed forces in central Europe if NATO countries display a "sincere" position on bilateral withdrawals.

about the Soviet position on mutual arms and troops reduction in Europe. His full comment was:

"The Soviet Union displayed a new, important initiative in the interests of ensuring European security, having suggested a start in negotiations on the question of reducing arms and armed forces in Central Europe.

"We are ready for such reductions if, certainly, the NATO countries indeed display a sincere position to the solution of this task which is so important for peace."

(Secretary of State William P. Rogers said, on his return to Washington today from a visit to Europe, that it had taken three years for the Russians to come around to the position on troop reductions advanced by NATO in 1968. "It is just a question of sincerity, there is no doubt about our sincerity," Mr. Rogers added.)

Mr. Kosygin spoke at a rally commemorating him as a Moscow district candidate for the Supreme Soviet (parliament) of the Russian Federation. His re-election June 13 is not in doubt.

On the Middle East, he said that "because of the guilt of Israeli troops... it is impossible to find a solution to the Middle East problem."

He said "there is no other way" to bring about a peaceful Middle East solution than the 1967 Security Council resolution demanding Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab territory.

Romanians Hear Diatribe

Chou Calls for Opposition To Politics of 'Superpowers'

By Seymour Topping

PEKING, June 9 (NYT).—Premier Chou En-lai, warning that the danger of world war persists, called yesterday upon small and medium-sized nations to unite and resist bullying by superpowers.

In an unusually militant attack on the Soviet Union and the United States, the premier asserted that China had no intention of assuming the role of superpower, "neither now nor ever in the future."

"We will always stand together with oppressed countries and peoples in firmly opposing power politics of superpowers," Mr. Chou said.

The premier made his remarks before a "friendship meeting" in the Congress auditorium of the Great Hall of People at the conclusion of a week-long visit of President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania. There were indications that the independent-minded Romanian statesman, who has sought to remain neutral in the Sino-Soviet ideological dispute, had encountered problems in his discussions with Chinese leaders.

The "friendship meeting" was delayed about two and a half hours, but by pushing it through the Senate he is putting added pressure on Japan to cut back textile exports.

apparently because of a protracted final negotiating round between the Romanian party and government delegation and Premier Chou. About 10,000 people, including members of the diplomatic corps, waited in their auditorium seats for more than an hour. Then diplomats and newsmen were escorted into an adjoining reception room where they waited for an additional hour amid the buzz of speculation.

No explanation for the delay was offered when the Romanian and Chinese delegations entered the auditorium and took their places on the dais.

Mr. Ceausescu warmly praised Chinese achievements and said that the views expressed by each party during the Sino-Romanian discussions had been "identical or close."

Romania took a stand with China against Soviet meddling in the affairs of other Communist parties. Without mentioning Moscow directly, Mr. Ceausescu declared that "each party must formulate independently its line and strategy" and relations between parties must be on the basis of equality and noninterference. The Romanian president, who is also his country's Communist party leader, added that he was striving to eliminate differences among Communist parties and restore cooperation.

A Soviet Paper Assails Mao Cult, China's Isolation

MOSCOW, June 9 (UPI).—An influential Soviet newspaper today attacked the cult of Mao Tse-tung and blamed it for China's "severance" from world history and culture.

"There is no justification for the fact that one of the greatest nations in the world has found itself, just for the cult of a single personality, severed not only from the history and culture of the world, but even from its own history and culture," Literaturnaya Gazeta said.

New View on One Southeast Asian Ruckus

The Frogs Were Making Love, Not War

By Walter Sullivan

NEW YORK, June 9 (NYT).—Last fall's widely reported "frog war" in Malaysia appears to have been misinterpreted. It is now believed the frogs were making love, not war.

This view is set forth in the newly issued annual report of the Center for Short-Lived Phenomena, operated in Cambridge, Mass., by the Smithsonian Institution. The center issues bulletins on such transient events as volcanic eruptions, fish kills and meteorite falls.

In November it circulated a report, based on press dispatches, which said, in part: "Two armies, one of frogs of various shades of green and the other of frogs of brownish, yellowish and light-black hues, to-ling in the thousands, fought over scant breeding grounds left by unusually heavy rains. "The frogs," it continued, "ripped and tore at each other. Some bystanders reported that the frogs carried off their dead when they could."

When zoologists from the University of Malaya in Kuala Lumpur reached the site, some 150 miles north of that city, the "war" was over and the puddle where it had taken place contained tadpoles and frogs' eggs. The puddle, 15 to 18 feet wide, was apparently formed when heavy rain ended a long drought.

The Malaysian zoologists concluded that "almost certainly" the "war" was a breeding frenzy typical of frogs who had long lain buried to survive a drought and then had been "liberated" by heavy rain. The noises produced by frogs already in the puddle drew others until perhaps 10,000 were assembled.

Some ten species apparently converged on the spot. From the tadpoles and eggs found later, it was determined that there were many members of the genus Rana, which includes the common bullfrog of America. There were also toads of the genus Bufo, to which most American toads belong.

It is now believed, according to the Smithsonian report, that relatively few died during the frenzy and that the deaths may have been caused when, in the scrambling, frogs came into contact with poisonous toads.

170,000 in 3 Years

The action on draft ceilings cuts the number of men who will be conscripted in fiscal 1972 to 130,000 and in fiscal 1973 to 100,000, instead of the 150,000 in each year previously set by the Armed Services Committee.

In his attack on Sen. Kennedy, Sen. Doile said that in a Monday night speech the Massachusetts Democrat had made the following statement: "The only possible cause for continuing the disputed policy of Vietnamizing our war and in the months ahead seems to be the President's intention to play his last card for peace at a time 7 to 10 November, 1972, when chances will be greater to fit the coming presidential election campaign."

Sen. Doile called this "a paralytic attack" and "the height of responsibility and blind permutation" which "exceeds the bounds of fair play."

Monsoon Rains Begin

Portage of Tents Imperils 5 Million Pakistan Refugees

NEW DELHI, June 9 (AP).—Pakistan refugees are facing another obstacle to survival, portage of tents to protect them from the summer monsoon, an official said today, as a cholera outbreak is now in control.

by the government, taking precedence over medicines for a cholera epidemic that he said had been brought under control.

He said that the refugees, already physically exhausted by the time they entered India, would have difficulty surviving, without adequate shelter, the torrential rains that began last weekend.

"If you leave the refugees in the monsoon in the open for three to four weeks, you will have one hell of a mess," he added.

The official said that there were now 5.2 million refugees in India and added that they were still coming across the border at a rate of between 50,000 and 100,000 daily.

At least 90 percent of the arrivals in the last month were Hindus, he said.

BONN, June 9 (AP).—Indian Foreign Minister Swaran Singh arrived here today for talks with West German leaders on the East Pakistan refugee situation.

Estimate of Number

GENEVA, June 9 (NYT).—R.K. Khadikar, Indian minister of labor, employment and rehabilitation, told the International Labor Organization conference yesterday that 4 million refugees from Pakistan had "taken shelter in our country."

Riasuddin Ahmed of Pakistan said the total was "nowhere near that number."

A spokesman for the UN High Commission for Refugees, focal point for the refugee relief, said more than $2 billion had been donated by governments, including $15 billion by the United States.

Hear-No-Evil Loses Ground

EL PASO, Texas, June 9 (UPI).—Texas is sponsoring a 1,000 educational program in El Paso policemen that includes a course to teach them the words in Spanish.

The officers must know the words so they will know when they're being "sued," a spokesman of the bilingual institute of El Paso said.

A teacher at the institute said the officers will learn to converse in Spanish about parking tickets, accidents, car, crowds, parades, bars and even baby deliveries, but he emphasized that the same words were taught only by listening.

POW Stand Called Rigid, Not Flexible

U.S. Accuses Hanoi of Deceptions

By Murray Marder
 WASHINGTON, June 9 (AP). — The Nixon administration accused North Vietnam today of creating a deceptive "impression of flexibility" in negotiating the release of war prisoners while holding to a "very hard" line on real terms.

Spokesmen at the White House and the State Department made a major effort to spike the newest pressure on the administration to fix a Dec. 31, 1971, date for total U.S. troop withdrawals from Indochina, tied to the release of American prisoners of war. The White House claimed that "false hopes" for release of the prisoners are being created. Administration officials cited as new public evidence of Hanoi's "very hardline positions" on POW release an official statement by North Vietnam's chief negotiator in Paris, Xuan Thuy, published today in The Washington Post (and in the International Herald Tribune).

Mr. Thuy said in the interview, conducted by Chalmers M. Roberts of The Washington Post, that "if a reasonable date is set [for U.S. troop withdrawal], the question of prisoners may be settled." Later in the interview, Mr. Thuy used the phrase "will be settled." But he also said that "as long as Nixon does not set a date, we cannot go into details of a settlement."

New Emphasis

Even more significantly, Mr. Thuy for the first time discussed two other conditions which neither the United States nor North Vietnam previously has focused on in public. Mr. Thuy said that by withdrawal Hanoi means withdrawal of all U.S. combat forces — ground, air or sea — that could strike at Vietnam. Mr. Thuy also indicated for the first time that North Vietnam will seek to cut off as well all U.S. military and economic aid to South Vietnam that would permit the United States to "remain involved in Vietnam" after its troops withdraw.

The Nixon administration itself has avoided public discussions of these two issues, which its own strategists are known to regard as more significant than prisoner release. But the bulk of today's official comments continued to focus on the narrower and more politically and emotionally charged subject of prisoners.

Presidential Press Secretary Ron Ziegler charged that "there perhaps may be an attempt" by former Defense Secretary Clark M. Clifford and unnamed others "to exploit the plight of American prisoners of war for domestic political objectives."

Mr. Clifford, defense secretary in 1968, the last year of the Johnson administration, said last night that he had "reason to believe" that the Vietnamese Communists would release all prisoners within 30 days of an agreement to withdraw all U.S. ground, air and naval personnel from Indochina by Dec. 31.

The Clifford proposal provided support for the current drive in the Senate to set a Dec. 31 deadline for troop withdrawals, through a draft act amendment sponsored by Sens. George McGovern, D., S.D., and Mark Hatfield, R., Ore. A vote on that amendment is now set for next Wednesday.

Mr. Ziegler said today that Mr. Clifford "did not choose to discuss his remarks with us before he made them." Mr. Ziegler added that reports which "say something would happen or might happen if a given position was taken by the United States . . . tend to raise hopes . . ."

The spokesman was asked if he was saying specifically that Mr. Clifford "is just doing this for domestic politics."

Mr. Ziegler: "I think my remarks relate to false hopes, yes."

Question: "By Clifford?"

Mr. Ziegler: "Yes."

The spokesman referred to what he called Mr. Clifford's "speculation . . . based on a source hidden to this side" about how events might unfold. "It appears," said Mr. Ziegler, "that there is an effort on the part of the other side to create an attitude or impression of flexibility when, indeed, their position has not changed at the talks in Paris."

Secretary of State William P. Rogers, on his return from Paris today, dismissed as "mere propaganda" any hints of a change in Hanoi's position on prisoner release. "The fact of the matter is that there is no change in their basic position," Mr. Rogers told newsmen.

Army Promoted General Named In Crimes Probe

WASHINGTON, June 9 (AP). — The Army has promoted a brigadier general to major general while investigating alleged atrocities that occurred under his command in Vietnam in 1968.

Maj. Gen. John W. Barnes, formerly commander of the 173d Airborne Infantry Brigade, was promoted to the two-star rank March 1, five months after the start of an investigation into the alleged war crimes and cover-up.

In most investigations the Army has "flagged" the files of officers involved until the inquiry has been completed and the case dismissed or settled by court-martial. No favorable action, such as promotion, may be taken while a file is flagged.

The Army said that, technically, Gen. Barnes himself was not under investigation at the time of his promotion.

A Copter-Borne Battalion Relieves Vietnam Fire Base

SAIGON, June 9 (UPI). — A battalion of South Vietnamese paratroopers landed by helicopter today at Fire Base 5, in the Central Highlands, relieving the two-month siege of the base near the border of Laos.

They were supported by U.S. and South Vietnamese aircraft using napalm and bombs.

B-52s had delivered heavy blows a few hours earlier at the North Vietnamese troops grouped around the base, 190 miles north of Saigon, after Communist troops launched a heavy mortar assault that killed six men of an overland relief force which has been blocked for days.

In Cambodia, meanwhile, some of the most intense fighting of the war in that country was reported 11 miles northeast of the capital, Phnom Penh, where heavy North Vietnamese forces continued their efforts to set up rocket bases before the monsoon rains begin. Cambodian spokesmen reported 100 Communists killed in the battle, which yesterday was reported to have cost the Cambodians 80 killed or wounded.

Fighting also flared in the Mekong Delta, 45 miles south of Saigon, and a South Vietnamese spokesman said government infantrymen supported by artillery and U.S. helicopter gunships killed 70 Viet Cong who attacked the Ban Hoa outpost. Government losses were announced as two dead and 18 wounded.

In Report to Knesset Mrs. Meir Asks U.S. for Aid To Offset Soviet-Egypt Pact

By Peter Grosse

JERUSALEM, June 9 (NYT). — Premier Golda Meir called on the United States today for prompt and far-reaching pledges of new arms and sophisticated armaments to Israel to balance the military commitments made by the Soviet Union to Egypt last month.

Reporting to the Knesset, or parliament, on the past two months of diplomatic maneuvering and power struggles in Egypt, Mrs. Meir stated that Israel's willingness to have the Suez Canal reopened still stands, but only on terms that Egypt's President Anwar Sadat has publicly rejected.

It was the Soviet-Egyptian Friendship Treaty of May 27 that dominated the premier's speech, with her analysis of the future of great-power involvement in the Middle East.

"The Soviet-Egyptian treaty possesses a significance extending beyond the sphere of Israeli-Egyptian relations," she said. "Egypt has undertaken to coordinate with the Soviet Union its moves and positions in the world political arena. The Soviet Union has gained control over Egypt's policy."

Elsewhere in her hour-long statement, she spoke of Egypt's new "national attitude" to Russia. "Egypt has undertaken to coordinate with the Soviet Union its moves and positions in the world political arena. The Soviet Union has gained control over Egypt's policy."

"The obvious implication of these developments, in Israeli eyes, should be a deepening of American military support for Israel. 'Israel looks forward to continued understanding of its vital claims to arms supplies from the United States government,' requires for its defense, especially in the air, and hopes that its requests will be met without delay," Mrs. Meir told the Knesset.

"Any failure to recognize the deep significance of the violation of the arms balance in the region, as a result of the supply of Soviet weapons to Egypt and the intensification of Soviet involvement, may be a temptation to aggression and a great danger to peace."

Neither Israeli nor American officials have so far revealed exactly what the United States is being asked to sell to Israel. Indeed, Israeli officials had been hoping that no public issue would have to be made this time around.

Qualified officials said that aircraft requirements for the coming year were presented to the United States "some months ago." They were touched upon, though not pressed, during the visit to Israel last month of Secretary of State William P. Rogers. Since then the United States has given no reply or indication of what can be expected.

Though military supplies other than planes are involved in the Israeli purchase request, officials said that it is the planes that provoke the political decision—other supplies, including complex electronic equipment, flow quietly and regularly without public discussion.

Israel received $500 million of economic support from the United States during the fiscal year ending this month and has requested a further $500 million for the coming year, including $200 million in outright grants rather than the loans on favorable terms which make up the rest of the financial aid.

"The problem of preserving the military balance is not static," Mrs. Meir said, "especially when Soviet arms shipments to Egypt are on the increase, and so is the involvement of the Soviet Union."

Mr. Kosygin defended Soviet influence in world affairs. "We cannot agree with the establishment of world hegemony by one power," he said.

Mr. Kosygin also called on Pakistani authorities to take prompt steps to allow East Pakistani refugees to return from India, where they have taken refuge.

Mr. Kosygin's speech dealt at length with his specialty, the Soviet economy. He reported that results of the first five months of this year have already exceeded the planned increase in labor productivity by more than 1 percent and called this a "great triumph for our working people."

He listed a long series of achievements and goals, including transformation of Moscow into a model city of Communism.

West Pointer, 24, Due for Vietnam, AWOL in Sweden

HEIDELBERG, West Germany, June 9 (UPI). — A West Point graduate scheduled for transfer to Vietnam in November, has been missing from his unit in West Germany since May 20 and is known to be in Sweden, a U.S. Army spokesman said today.

In Stockholm, police sources said Lt. Vequist has applied for asylum in protest against the war in Vietnam. They said he arrived in Sweden with his wife and child at the end of May.

The spokesman said he did not know why Lt. John Robert Vequist had gone absent without leave. He said he knew of no previous case of a West Pointer fleeing to Sweden to avoid Vietnam duty.

Army records list Lt. Vernist, 24, as a native of St. Joseph, Mo. He graduated from West Point in 1968 and was assigned to West Germany later that year.

At the time of his disappearance he was serving as an assistant operations officer at the headquarters of the 9th Artillery Group in Kaiserslautern.

Cairo Cow Gives Supp To Soviet

CAIRO, June 9 (UPI). — "Friendship and cooperation treaty between Egypt and the Soviet Union won unanimous approval today from the Relations and Defense Council of the People's Council," the Cairo radio said.

The 15-year agreement, signed May 27, during a visit by Soviet President N. S. Khrushchev, was later in the council for final ratification. It will meet Sunday for the final vote.

The committee approved the treaty after a report by Minister Mahmoud El-Khatib, Egyptian-Soviet relations "extensive" discussions, treaty, the radio said.

The discussions centered on the treaty's eighth article, which provides for military cooperation between Cairo and Moscow.

Earlier today, Egypt's military and industrial and called again on the States to make its stand on the conflict with Israel.

Law Agency Hunting Bacteria That Glows When Heroin Is Near

By Stuart Auerbach WASHINGTON, June 9 (WP).—A new weapon in the war against drugs may be bacteria that "turn on" to heroin.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Agency reported yesterday that it gave the New York City Police Department $40,724 to find a strain of bioluminescent bacteria that glow in the presence of heroin.

Richard W. Velde, L.E.A.A. associate administrator, said that the police are trying to use technology developed by the Army for sensing biological warfare agents.

"You have in effect some trained insects that are very much like lightning bugs. They are bioluminescent agents. They are extremely sensitive to certain chemical compounds," Mr. Velde said.

He said that the New York police are seeking types of bacteria—microscopic organisms—that will glow when there is heroin around.

Climps of these bacteria could be carried by police officers in a container that would allow air to run past the microscopic bugs. The police could tell by the intensity of the glow whether there was a large or small amount of heroin nearby.

Experiments have shown that the bacteria stay alive and glowing for about four or five days. But Irving Slotz, acting director of L.E.A.A.'s National Institute for Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice, said that present plans call for replacing the glowing bugs every day to make sure that they are not too old.

Each container of bioluminescent bacteria costs $1.50, he said.

Law-Order Candidate Loses in N.J.

NEWARK, N.J., June 9 (AP).—Anthony Imperiale, the tough-talking white militant from Newark's North Ward, and former Green Beret Capt. Robert F. Marasco were defeated in separate primary elections yesterday.

Mr. Imperiale, a law-and-order advocate, was beaten on his home territory in a bid for a seat on the Essex County Democratic committee.

A registered Republican, he was defeated by a 2 1/2-to-1 margin by Joseph Ceres, a newcomer to politics.

The election covered much of the North Ward, an all-white section around Mr. Imperiale's home.

Mr. Imperiale rose to prominence after the 1967 riots shattered Newark. He won a councilman-at-large seat in 1968 and ran unsuccessfully for mayor in 1969.

Mr. Marasco, who has admitted the killing of a Vietnamese triple agent, lost a primary bid for the Republican nomination to the town council in Bloomfield, where he lives. He ran last in a five-man field seeking the nominations for three seats.

Now an insurance salesman, Mr. Marasco left the Army last year after charges against him and several other Green Berets allegedly involved in the killing were dropped. He recently acknowledged that he fired the shot that killed the agent.

The elections were part of a statewide primary in which nominations were at stake in legislative races and local and county offices.

N.Y. Power Use Sets a Record

NEW YORK, June 9 (AP).—New Yorkers used more electricity yesterday than at any time in the city's history, the Consolidated Edison Co. said.

The demand was met without having to impose a power curtailment.

The day's high temperature of 82 degrees was two degrees below the record high set for the date in 1933.

Preliminary figures indicated that between 4 p.m. and 5 p.m. 7,984,000 kilowatts were used, topping the record of 7,876,000 set an hour before.

The peak usage was 118,800 kilowatts more than the demand on July 17, 1969. On that day, Con Ed had to impose a 3 percent voltage reduction—a brownout—to compensate.

First Deaths in 18 Months

2 U.S. Crashes Revive Airport Safety Issue

By Frank C. Porter

WASHINGTON, June 9 (UPI).—Fatal crashes on Sunday and Monday ended an 18-month period in which not a single passenger on a scheduled domestic airline lost his life.

They also stirred anew a controversy over airport and airway safety that has been largely dormant over the last year.

The Tweed-New Haven, Conn., airport, where 28 persons died Monday when an Allegheny Airlines turboprop undershot the runway, became the focal point of bitter recriminations.

It had been cited as dangerous as far back as September, 1969, by the head of an Air Line Pilots Association study of the nation's airports.

Series of Suits

Standing in the charred ruins of summer houses Tuesday, James R. Malarkey, the airport manager, attributed the crash to the lack of an instrument landing system. And he said that such a system was lacking because residents of nearby East Haven had blocked the airport's expansion through a series of court suits.

"It is infuriating that the public interest is being so badly served and that a few people can bring airport development to a grinding halt," he said.

Much the same view was taken by Capt. Phil Perry, a member of the ALPA Airport Safety Committee that made the 1969 survey. "Communities that want air service and won't accept the responsibilities that go with it just don't deserve the service," he said in a telephone interview.

Anthony V. Memayo, a lawyer for the East Haven group, denied Mr. Malarkey's charge: "For years now, we've been warning them about such a disaster because we've seen them bring planes in there when you can't even see the tower..."

9 Other Airports

According to published reports at the time, the ALPA survey also named these other nine airports as "dangerous."

Bradford, Pa., site of two Allegheny Airlines crashes in two weeks in 1968; Greater Cincinnati airport, where two crashes occurred in 1967; Kennedy International in New York; Bluegrass Airport, Lexington, Ky.; Molokai and Kona airports, Hawaii; Kansas City, Mo., Municipal airport; Kanawha airport, Charleston, W.Va., and Miami International airport.

Capt. Joseph W. Meek, chairman of the ALPA committee, could not be reached for comment yesterday.

But Capt. Perry said that in no sense could the list be considered as the "ten most dangerous airports" in the United States as it has been frequently construed.

Capt. Meek had cited them, in response to questions, as offering certain problems under certain operating conditions, Capt. Perry explained.

Only One Failing

Capt. Perry said, for example, that it is "absurd" to call Miami International dangerous. Capt. Meek had merely called attention to a high-rise motel at the airport that, he said, might have been built in a better location, Capt. Perry explained.

Runways Improved

As for JFK in New York, the runways used to be rough and sometimes slippery, Capt. Perry went on, but since then they have been improved.

Capt. Perry said that of about 530 American airports used by commercial airlines, more than 300 still have no instrument landing systems. And many are still hampered by short runways (as in the case of Tweed-New Haven), bad approach lighting and peripheral lighting, and other factors.

But he as well as other spokesmen for ALPA and airline industry sources stressed that much better progress toward airway and airport modernization and improved safety has been made in the last year or so than previously.

"The airports are beginning to catch up to the [aircraft] technology," an ALPA official said.

Arnaldo Mondadori, Founded Publishing Empire in Italy

MILAN, June 9 (UPI).—Arnaldo Mondadori, 82, Italy's leading publisher and the man who acquainted Italians with such novelists as Ernest Hemingway and William Faulkner, died at his home yesterday from a kidney disease.

Mr. Mondadori had retired two years ago, leaving his publishing house in the hands of his son Giorgio.

A self-made man whose creed was that any good book will find readers, Mr. Mondadori built up a publishing empire that churned out everything from Franz Kafka and Luigi Pirandello to Mickey Mouse comics. Yearly sales of Mondadori books and magazines averaged 75 billion lire ($120 million).

The son of an illiterate worker in the village of Poggio Rusco, Mr. Mondadori went into publishing in 1907 by printing a novel by an obscure Socialist politician. His business quickly expanded and he reached nationwide prominence in the 1930s by acquainting the people of Fascist Italy with such foreign authors as Thomas Mann, Hemingway and Pearl S. Buck.

He fled to Switzerland in the final years of the Fascist regime and laid the groundwork there for his new, postwar publishing ventures in Italy, which ranged from collections of classics to women's magazines and Walt Disney comics.

Danube Cruises Increase in Popularity

Tourists traveling to Vienna from other parts of Europe should certainly take advantage of the excellent connections between Passau (W. Germany) and Vienna.

Offering daily service, the 1st Danube Steamship Co. maintains the modern air-conditioned passenger ship "Theodor Koerner" for this voyage. With a stop in Linz, the trip takes a full day downstream and about 1 and 1/2 days upstream. The ship is practically designed to give not only an adequate amount of cabin space, but also to offer two restaurants—including a bar and a "Weinstube" plus a sun deck on two levels.

Having become accustomed to Danube travel, tourists, after arriving in Vienna, may also continue onwards to E. Europe.

There are a number of regular services; by hydrofoil boat and by passenger ships.

Between Vienna and Budapest the trip by hydrofoil takes only four hours. A shorter trip to Bratislava (CSFR) takes about one hour.

For more ambitious tourists, there are also trips to the mouth of the Danube with connection steamers to Black Sea ports and to the Mediterranean.

Offering weekly service, the Soviet Danube Steamship Co. maintains four luxury boats—the Dniepr, Volga, Amur and the Dniestr—running during May,

June, July, August and September.

Visas for the various stops along the way are quickly obtained right aboard ship, eliminating the usual long waits when applying for them back home. The class you wish, with stopovers and guided tours, are Bratislava, Czechoslovakia; Belgrade, Yugoslavia; Budapest, Hungary; Ruse and Varna, Bulgaria; Chirgiu and Bucharest, Romania; and Yalta in the Crimea.

Although your stay in Yalta is only for a day and a half, it is certainly the highlight of a Danube-Black Sea cruise.

A health resort town made famous by the 1945 meeting of Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin. Yalta is the Riviera of the Soviet Union—and as such the special favorite of vacationing Russians.

The boats from Vienna to Yalta, covering a distance of more than 1,200 miles, provides a number of "events" along the way. Literally to write home about are such things as scrambling under the low bridge at Novi Sad, Yugoslavia, skirting the floodplains of Margaret Island at Budapest, passing and tooting the famous Friendship Bridge that connects Bulgaria and Romania, and changing from your river boat to a sea ship at Iuzhaki, Russia, where the Danube finally flows into the Black Sea.

Cosmonauts Complete Move to Salyut for Long Stay

By Theodore Stabad

MOSCOW, June 9 (NYT).—A jet cosmonaut floated upside in today in the weightlessness of the spacious orbital station Salyut and, pedaling the air, donned a new tension suit designed to keep muscles in condition during long space flights.

After Lt. Col. Georgi I. Dobrovolski had thus started what may have been the first fashion show in space, the three-man crew raised the flying scientific laboratory in the second orbital revolution in two days.

The colonel and his teammates, Givlay N. Volkov and Viktor Patsayev, both civilian engineers, also shut down the man-rated equipment on the Salyut, thus completing the transfer of their activities from the ferry craft that had brought them to the station Salyut on Monday. The Salyut was launched April 19 without a crew.

Long Mission

The modeling of the space suit, renewed orbital correction and the closing off of equipment and the ferry craft made it restingly certain that the current mission would be a long one. A keeping with their custom of secrecy on details of space operations, the Soviet spokesmen have announced the planned duration of the present experiment, and their plans have had to be deduced from published information.

It was the first day the cosmonauts had donned the tight-fitting overalls, known as a penguin suit, in which tension is produced by several layers of rubberized material. The suit forces the wearer to exercise his muscles despite the state of weightlessness that exists in space.

If the wearer were to relax, the tension in the rubber would pull his knees up to the chin and bring his arms together across the chest.

Much Needed Tension

The suit was said to be particularly useful in producing much needed tension in leg muscles, spine, neck and arms.

A designer, identified as Dr. A.S. Barer, was quoted by Tass, the Soviet press agency, as having said that the suit would be "sufficient to insure normal muscular tone and work for the heart."

Another space scientist, Boris V. Raushenbakh, said that today's orbital correction had placed the 55,000-pound space laboratory on an optimal course—175 by 161 miles—for the astrophysical and earth surveys it is expected to conduct.

No more corrections were said to be contemplated in the immediate future.

Campaign Fever Running High

Rome Is Decked Out for Election on Sunday

By Marvine Howe

ROME, June 9 (NYT).—The city has been decked out like a Christmas tree for the election next Sunday, but the holiday spirit is missing.

Bright streamers that hang from almost every monument and wall bid for votes. The streets are splattered with drips of leaflets proclaiming the virtues of the nine main Italian political parties.

Every day for a month, rallies have been held in piazzas and theaters throughout the city, and party leaders have promised, cajoled and threatened the electorate with an avalanche of words.

Nearly 8 million people are to select municipal councils in Rome, Genoa, Bari and 150 other cities as well as a regional assembly in Sicily.

First Major Test

The elections will be the first major test for Premier Emilio Colombo's year-old left-of-center coalition. Perhaps more important, the elections, taking place at a time of social crisis, will serve as a period of reappraisal for the parties of the coalition, headed by the Christian Democrats.

The country's problems are tremendous, and many Italians are beginning to doubt that the elected representatives have the capacity to solve them. Violence, corruption and labor turmoil—everyone from doctors to hotel workers have been on strike—have taken their toll, even on an easy-going people, and the social upheaval has intensified since the 1968 national election.

Guido Carli, governor of the Bank of Italy, gloomily reported last week, "the first signs of recession" in the economy, which has greatly expanded since World War II. "The downturn, attributed in part to labor unrest, included a drop in the vital revenues from tourism.

Everyone talks about "malesere," or malaise. What it adds up to is growing pains: Italy has been developing fast and the problems are piling up.

The Italian, a chronic complainer, feels every year that he has more to complain about. But if pressed, he will acknowledge that he has never been so well off.

Patience has probably worn thin this year because more people have been directly affected by the unrest. As long as the strikers stayed in the Fiat factory, the general public did not mind too much, but frustrations have become apparent more in recent months with the stoppage of mail and transport, the closing of bars, cafes and supermarkets, and growing piles of garbage.

Hotel Workers Strike

ROME, June 9 (Reuters).—Trade unions representing 160,000 hotel workers throughout Italy announced a series of staggered strikes today which could deal a serious blow to the country's troubled tourist industry.

The unions are demanding a new contract which would abolish grading differences between manual and clerical staff, fix a national minimum wage, and reduce working hours.

Ceausescu Flies to Pyongyang

Romanian Sovereignty Backed by Peking

HONG KONG, June 9 (Reuters).—China pledged today to support Romania in its struggle to "safeguard" its independence and sovereignty, the New China News Agency reported.

The pledge was contained in a joint communiqué issued after an eight-day visit by Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu. Mr. Ceausescu left Peking today for Pyongyang, where he was greeted by North Korean Premier Kim Il Song.

The communiqué said President Ceausescu and Chinese leaders held talks in an atmosphere of "cordiality, friendship and mutual understanding" on relations between China and Romania and on international questions of common concern.

The Romanians praised the "deep revolutionary transformation of China and the country's achievements which heighten the prestige of Socialism in the world and strengthen forces fighting against the imperialist policy of aggression."

Both sides stressed that they had always supported each other "in the common struggle against imperialism and the reactionaries and against power politics."

Observers saw the Chinese pledge as an encouragement to Romania to continue its striving for an independent foreign policy despite Soviet pressure.

The communiqué said Romania had firmly withstood "imperialist pressure" and won important victories in its struggle to safeguard national independence and sovereignty.

The Chinese side reaffirms that, "tempered through the great proletarian cultural revolution, the Chinese people will, as always, fulfill their internationalist duty."

Yugoslavs in Peking

BELGRADE, June 9 (AP).—Yugoslav Foreign Minister Mirko Tpopac and members of a government delegation were warmly welcomed by Chinese officials when they arrived in Peking today, the Yugoslav news agency, Tanjug, reported.

Mr. Tpopac's visit, the first by a Yugoslav foreign minister, marked a further step in the improvement of relations between the two countries following an exchange of ambassadors last year after ten years of cool relations, the agency said.

Opposition Party in Japan Gets Peking Invitation

TOKYO, June 9 (NYT).—The Komeito, Japan's second largest opposition party with 47 members in the lower house, has been invited to send a party delegation to the People's Republic of China, a party spokesman announced here today.

Yesterday, Yoshikatsu Takekiri, the party chairman, told a news conference in Kobe that his party advocated recognizing the People's Republic as the only legitimate government of China, concluding a peace treaty with it, and abrogating Japan's 1952 peace treaty with the Republic of China on Taiwan.

It was the first time that the Komeito had explicitly advocated cutting Japan's ties with Taiwan in order to establish formal relations with Peking.

Although a party spokesman said that Peking's invitation came quite independently of Mr. Takekiri's statement, the two are believed to be interrelated in that the Komeito has been trying for several months to visit the People's Republic. The invitation comes at a politically useful time for Komeito which, along with other parties, is in the midst of an upper house election campaign. Voting day is June 27.

U.S. Space Officials Dismiss Soviet Bid for Moon Treaty

By Richard D. Lyons

WASHINGTON, June 9 (NYT).—Federal space and diplomatic officials said privately yesterday that Moscow's proposal for an international treaty to bar military activity on the moon was an attempt to forestall cooperation on other space issues.

"There's not one thing new of any importance in it," said one official who has negotiated with Russians on space issues.

He said everything in the proposal of Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko already is contained—either directly or by implication—in the five-year-old NPT treaty governing the peaceful uses of outer space, which has been signed by more than 80 nations.

Another official pointed out that a UN subcommittee, now meeting in Geneva, has for years been fruitlessly seeking Soviet agreement on liability for damages that might be caused by spacecraft landing on earth.

Accused of Gail

"The Russians have never wanted to be held responsible for anything and they're trying to fess the thing in Geneva," he said. "In fact, they have the gall to include in their proposal a clause governing liability for damages if they occur on the moon."

Article 11 of the Soviet proposal contains a provision that would hold a nation responsible for the "actions or inactions" of its equipment and personnel on those of other nations engaged in lunar activities.

Over the years the United States and other nations have sought, through the UN, to have the Soviet Union agree to a pact that would force a nation to accept responsibility for mishaps caused by its own space hardware.

If, for example, a piece of Soviet "space junk" fell on Ireland, damaging a private home, the proposal would allow the occupants to sue the Soviet Union under Irish law. The Soviet Union, however, takes the position that the suit must be settled under the provisions of Soviet law.

Thousands of pieces of space junk—rocket nozzles, expended boosters and fuel tanks—have fallen to earth since the first Sputnik was orbit 14 years ago. To date there have been no substantiated reports of damage, because most of the material burns up during re-entry into the atmosphere due to the heat of friction. But the law of averages is expected to catch up eventually.

Western Union Strike Goes Into 2d Week

NEW YORK, June 9 (AP).—A week-old strike by 20,100 employees against Western Union continued yesterday after brief negotiations with two unions produced no progress. No further meetings were scheduled.

A union leader said the company would not change its latest offer—a 20 percent pay boost over two years. The union's demand is 31 percent over two years.

The strike has halted domestic telegrams and money orders for the general public. Western Union is maintaining certain automated services with supervisory personnel.

France Assails Big Two's Moves in Middle East

PARIS, June 9 (AP).—French Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann said today that individual moves by either the United States or Russia to reach an agreement on the Middle East situation could not bring a last settlement.

In an address to the French National Assembly, Mr. Schumann said, "the chances for a stable settlement in the Near East do not increase when a very powerful act alone."

His statement was interpreted as an open criticism of the policy of State Secretary William P. Rogers's efforts to negotiate a settlement of the Suez Canal as a toward an overall solution. He was also criticizing intervention by Russia, which recently signed a treaty with Egypt.

Mr. Schumann explained that the spectacular deployment of presence and one influence acts the rival power, and, as consequence, stirs up the rival of the powers.

Four powers—Russia, the United States, Britain and France—should work out a solution to the Middle East which they could collectively guarantee.

Too Late to Save Les Halles Hangars, Paris Official Reportedly Says

PARIS, June 9 (REUTERS).—The top officer for Paris, prefect Michel Diebolt, has said that it is too late to take down for re-use elsewhere the famed hangars of the old market, Les Halles, according to the newspaper Le Monde.

A newspaper said he told the financier Orrin Hein, who expressed an interest in buying the pavilions if they could remain on the original site.

The need to complete the subway line with a station at Les Halles as rapidly as possible made unfeasible any plan to dismantle the buildings in such a way that they could be put up again.

Mr. Diebolt was reported to have said that the buildings, designed by Victor Ballard in 1843 and completed before 1900, must be removed between July 1 and Nov. 10, so construction can start Jan. 1.

Mr. Hein commented: "The pavilions have been there for over a hundred years. I don't understand why the rush now. Precise studies of the possibility of dismantling them have not been made, and I wonder, given these conditions, if the City of Paris had not decided once and for all to raze the pavilions."

"I have a meeting tomorrow with Culture Minister Jacques Duhamel and hope to discuss the possibility of a delay with him."

Writer Sinyavsky Reported Barred From Moscow

MOSCOW, June 9 (UPI).—Writer Andrei D. Sinyavsky, who was released from prison this week, will be barred from living in Moscow, literary sources said today.

Mr. Sinyavsky is temporarily living in a Moscow suburb now, the sources said, but he soon will be required to move to another city.

Mr. Sinyavsky and Yuri Daniel were sentenced to prison camp in 1966 for writings that authorities judged to be "anti-Soviet slanders." Mr. Daniel was freed in September, 1970, and lives in the town of Keings, 120 miles south of Moscow. He also was banned from living in Moscow.

The two writers had produced bitter underground novels under the pseudonyms Abram Terts and Nikolai Arzhak. The novels were smuggled abroad and became best sellers, angering Soviet authorities, who eventually discovered who the real Terts and Arzhak were.

The sources said Mr. Daniel resisted authority in prison, carrying out hunger strikes and smuggling protest writings from prison. He served his full five-year sentence, much of it in solitary confinement.

Mr. Sinyavsky, they said, was the opposite. He became deeply religious in prison, and his behavior was so good that authorities released him a year and a half before the end of his seven-year sentence.

East-West Trade: Old Habits Die Hard

Balance-of-payments worries are coming to outweigh considerations of ideology in the shaping of American trade policy, and it's about time. For a generation after World War II, the United States commonly treated trade as an instrument of global policy. Countries with which we had political and ideological disputes—the Communist countries—were regarded as unworthy of the privilege of trading with us. We rationalized an elaborate strategic scaffolding for embargoes, blockades, strategic lists, tariff discrimination, export controls, and so on; inevitably, a big bureaucracy grew up with a vested interest in maintaining and expanding these various restrictions. In the interim, our competitors—many of them our allies—took the business. West Europe's trade with East Europe and Russia is ten times ours, and we do no business at all with China and Cuba.

Only now, when we have become seized by an entirely appropriate concern for our recurring balance-of-payments deficits and our declining trade balance, are we starting to realize that the practice of indiscriminate economic warfare is a costly anachronism. Hard times have brought home the lesson of how harmful and gratuitous it is both economically and politically to inject artificial "strategic" objections into the free play of world commerce. This is the significance of the report that the United States has approved licenses for the export of $85 million in vehicle-making equipment to the Soviet Union. Just a year ago Defense Secretary Laird destroyed a prospective Ford truck deal with Russia, demanding that first "there should be some indication on the part of the Soviet Union that they're not going to continue sending the trucks to North Vietnam by shiploads for use on the Ho Chi Minh Trail."

Well, no such indication has been given. It was idle anyway to imagine Moscow would cut off Hanoi for the sake of American trucks—when it can buy European trucks, some made under American license. In the year since then, economic pressure has shaved the Pentagon's Neanderthal influence on trade policy, and now American firms will be allowed to compete for an important range of orders previously off-limits to them. But the contest between bad habit and good sense is far from over. Currently Chile wants to buy two more Boeing-707s and a 727. Some officials reportedly are hankering at the deal on the ground that Chile may land the planes at Havana and that the newly elected Marxist government in Santiago hasn't established how it will pay its future bills or what it will pay for nationalized American properties. These considerations are demeaning; that they are raised at all testifies to the ossification of cold-war thinking on trade. Other American-made planes already land at Havana. Chile has paid past bills without fault. To wield 707s and 727s as a political club is (1) to insult Chile, (2) to ignore its ability to buy commercial jets elsewhere, (3) and to stiffen any incipient Chilean tendencies to go hard on the nationalized American firms.

We trust the decision on the planes will reflect Mr. Nixon's words of March 25 to Boeing employees, after the SST defeat: "Each time I fly in Air Force One—a Boeing plane—I am reminded of the role Boeing has played in making America the world's leader in commercial aviation. Throughout the world, the 707, the 727, the 737, and now the giant 747 have become symbols of America's leadership."

The most intriguing East-West trade case now pending concerns the list of items permissible in trade with China which Mr. Nixon has said he will release next week. The key question is whether he will apply a more stringent measure to China than Russia, as the Pentagon is urging him to do on the ground that China, being less advanced, will be hurt by denial of some items whose denial to Russia would be meaningless.

This is, of course, precisely the reason to put trade with both countries on the same basis. Politically, discrimination against Peking would undo much of the benefit gained from the President's new China initiatives. Economically it would simply insure that China will buy elsewhere or create its own capacity. This goes for food products as well as manufactured goods. And in the case of food, it would be wise to remove the restriction, adopted by President Kennedy in a weak political moment, which requires half of the food grains shipped to Communist countries to be carried in American ships. So high are their rates that they have effectively discouraged food shipments.

In a country ostensibly dedicated to free enterprise, why should the government intervene in private trading decisions? Doubtless there is a class of items, however hard it may be to define them, which have a direct military potential rendering them "strategic," and these should not be sold. But the idea that the United States alone has the economic resources or the political clout to control industrial and military progress elsewhere has been proven wrong by events. It is an illusion which the country's politics can no longer abide and which the country's economy can no longer afford.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

Soviet Space Station

Soviet scientists and engineers have scored another major space first by creating the large manned orbiting station now circling the earth. Manned vehicles have orbited before this, but they have all been relatively small.

The pressurized portion of the Salyut space station has a cubic volume more than 15 times as great as the crew compartment of the Apollo command module. This implies immediately that the Soviet space station can carry a great deal more equipment than any previous manned vehicle, while it also provides space for more diverse activities than was possible for astronauts penned up in the cramped quarters heretofore available.

Moscow has stressed the scientific purposes of the Salyut vehicle, and there is no reason to question these goals. This first space station is very much of an experimental model, from which much can and will be learned about man's capabilities for working in a weightless environment. Moreover, the collection of scientific data about earth and about outer space has been long recognized as one of the prime areas of usefulness for stations like Salyut.

Nevertheless, it must be recognized that Salyut and its successors raise important new problems for international law and international relations. Back in 1960, during the celebrated case of the American U-2 planes shot down over the Urals, Soviet leaders became very indignant about a manned American vehicle flying over their country. There have been no similar protests about the manned and unmanned satellites of the space era, but uneasiness must grow as political leaders in many countries contemplate the potential military uses of large, semi-permanent manned space stations such as Salyut.

There needs to be much more explicit agreement than now exists as to what may and may not be done with orbiting space stations. But even if there is such agreement, the problem of verification will remain. The solution will not emerge until space stations are internationalized, either by making them the exclusive instruments of the United Nations or by requiring that their crews be composed of astronauts from countries of diverse political complexion.

For the moment, technology has badly outrun the development of legal and operational mechanisms to assure that space will always be a zone of peace rather than, potentially, still another arena for conflict. The Soviet Union unveiled on Monday a proposed new treaty covering men's activities on the moon, but a far more pressing immediate need is a corresponding treaty governing men's activities on and with large orbiting space stations.

Nature's Work—and Man's

The present tragedy of East Bengal is a man-made one, unlike the appalling hurricane of last autumn. In the one case a tidal wave swept up the Bay of Bengal and some hundreds of thousands died because of it. In the other the government of Pakistan made a foolish decision and carried it out with a brutality that has shocked the world—or at least the attentive and literate part of it. To the dying child and its starving mother lying on a mat, the distinction between nature and man may not be so clear. The regularity of disaster is what these people know.

PARIS—If the bicycle is an accepted fact today, it certainly was not always so. In 1840 a Scots blacksmith named McMillan rode into Glasgow on a "velocipede," formed with two wheels in line, two pedals and two handles. As in the case of many another innovator, the authorities considered him a dangerous lunatic. He was locked up and only released if he promised "he wouldn't do it anymore." The McMillan of today is the flying machine man. Fifty years ago he was the man who had done for the cycle.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Major General Charles T. Mencher, chief of the Army Air Service, has asked Secretary of War Weeks to relieve Brigadier General William Mitchell, assistant to the Chief of the Air Service. While Secretary Weeks will not say what action will be taken on the request, all precedent and Army discipline will probably cause him to relieve General Mitchell. It is definitely known that Brigadier General Mitchell favors a united Army and Navy Air Service and that Major General Mencher is against this move.

The Fragile Cities

NEW YORK—New York City is supposed to have the power to overwhelm all its squabbling citizens. Like some great, elemental force of nature, it seems as permanent as its great rivers, polluted but irresistible.

That is how it seems: steel drilled and cemented deep into granite, and soaring above the clouds. But the latest rash of strikes by the municipal workers, locking its drawbridges in mid-river and threatening to drown it in garbage, illustrates once more the fragility of the modern city.

Like the mightiest of nations, New York rests on power which is highly vulnerable to guerrilla warfare. Its energy is not going to be stopped this time by a few angry bridge mechanics and sanitation workers and their frightened union bosses, but their assertion of arbitrary power to force the city and the state to meet their demands at the expense of the people, raises questions about the rights and duties of public service employees that have to be faced.

There are now about 13 million people working in the United States for federal, state, and local governments—almost 18 percent of the total work force. These are not only men who operate the bridges and collect the garbage, but also policemen, firemen, and workers who supervise the whole electrical power structure on which the great cities of America depend.

Outlook Darkening

Accordingly, if public-service employees in the federal, state, and municipal governments can use force to try to get the wages and pensions they want, as the bridge and sanitation workers in New York are now doing, the outlook for the cities will be even more bleak than it is today. It is easy to understand the demands of the striking municipal workers in New York, and even the desperation which makes them risk anarchy to deal with their economic problems. Outside of the very rich in New York, the rest are complaining that the cost of living, taxation, inflation, and education is staggering. Not only the bridge technicians and sanitation workers, but even the successful management and professional classes are in serious economic trouble, and would probably strike if they could.

So organized labor is not alone. It organized in order to fight the arbitrary power of the employers, but it is now using the power of violence to achieve its own ends. When this is done by public-service workers who stand at the police, fire, and power gates of a great city, it can paralyze the whole community.

This is the real issue in the present New York City strikes. If bridge workers and sanitation workers can use force to compel the state and city to meet their demands, why not policemen, firemen, teachers, electrical supervisors, and all other public service employees?

Power of Paralysis

Such is the reliance of vast cities like New York on electrical power that 50 key electrical workers, down the right manholes, could paralyze every electrical circuit and stop every subway, elevator, air conditioner, and computer in Manhattan.

There is a fundamental difference between working for a private concern and working for a city, state or federal agency. You don't have to take a public service job, but if you do, there is an obligation to render public service and this is what the municipal workers in New York are rejecting.

They are insisting on using the arbitrary power their unions were established to oppose on the part of management. In fact, the leaders of the present strikes in New York have gone so far that even this pro-labor city is up in arms against them. And so are the national labor leaders, though they are bolder in private than in public.

Though as this city is, powerful as it is, it always wonders what would happen if all its public-service employees, police, firemen, teachers and all the rest, insisted on the right to strike and paralyze the city. Who then, would protect the rights and liberties of the majority?

"Men are qualified for civil liberty," said Edmund Burke, "in exact proportion to their disposition to put moral chains upon their own appetites. . . . Society cannot exist unless a controlling power upon will and appetite be placed somewhere. . . . It is ordained in the external constitution of things, that men of intemperate minds cannot be free. Their passions forge their fetters."

Even liberal New York City is now debating whether the public service workers have not got out of hand, and whether their concept of collective blackmail does not have to be brought under stricter legal control.

WASHINGTON—Whom do you believe, the pollsters or the polls?

The most recent Gallup poll, released last Friday, showed Sen. Edmund S. Muskie moving ahead of President Nixon for the first time (though by a statistically insignificant margin). In a trial heat, Muskie got 41 percent, Nixon 39 and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama 12, with 8 percent undecided.

The survey showed Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy running neck-and-neck with the President.

Nothing very encouraging there for Nixon, and the trend has been steadily adverse; 18 months ago, he led Muskie by fully 12 points. Moreover, the Harris poll of May 10 showed Muskie eight points up, 47 percent to 39.

Yet a growing number of Democratic politicians across the country, surveyed during the course of a month of travel, believe that Nixon has emerged from a prolonged political slump, and that he may well be tough to beat in 1972.

Said a political professional in Ohio: "He's turned the corner." A Southern governor: "Suddenly, except for the economy, he seems to have things under control." A California congressman: "He's not on the defensive as much as before."

The paradox is explained, in part, by the fact that politicians react to events faster than the general public, and indeed tend to base their calculations partly on the probable reaction to events that have not yet happened but appear likely to.

A number of leading Democrats commented on Nixon's foreign-policy initiatives, including the slight easing of tensions in the Middle East, the first steps toward a rapprochement with China, the breakthrough in the strategic arms limitation talks and other events. The President, they said, seems to be putting himself in a position where he can portray himself to the nation as a peace-maker.

These developments, however, are all tentative, and new trouble in the Middle East, a collapse of the tenuous dialogue with Peking or other events could wipe out Nixon's gains before November, 1972.

That should be within the realm of possibility if he proceeds with the plan, reportedly under discussion within the government, to cut American troop strength to 40,000 or 50,000 men by August, 1972.

A minority still believes that it will be possible to make a moral, rather than pragmatic, case against the President if, as seems likely, American planes are still conducting widespread raids in Indochina. It will be possible to argue, the minority suggests, that Nixon is interested only in "changing the color of the corpses," not ending the war.

Most hard-headed politicians agree, however, with the Washington lawyer and political strategist who asked the other day, "How can you run against Nixon on Vietnam when he has pulled 400,000 troops out of an unpopular war and you (the Democrats) put them there in the first place?"

His analysis, interestingly enough, matches closely that of Republican tacticians and key White House staff members.

Several Democrats also think that Nixon's increased success in his seemingly endless tug-of-war with the Congress—on the measure to reduce the number of U.S. troops stationed in Europe, for example—will have an important political impact. He is also expected to beat back another attempt to put through the McGovern-Hatfield amendment to end the Vietnam war.

A New Impression

Such victories tend to create an impression of competence and leadership, the exact opposite of the sense of fumbling and defensiveness generated by his Supreme Court nominations of Clement F. Haynsworth Jr. and G. Harrold Carswell.

Back to the Slide Rule

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON—The latest batch of economic statistics does not merely report more bad news about unemployment and inflation. This time the indicators record a new fact that explains the continuation of "stagflation." The fact is that the administration's main hope for stimulating economic recovery—monetary policy—is not working. As everybody knows, there are two principal theories about how to foster increased economic activity. One is the Keynesian theory, which emphasizes fiscal policy made through the medium of the federal budget. The premise is that the government can nudge particular groups of consumers or businessmen into buying or investing by budgetary outlays or tax benefits.

The other theory is the monetarist theory widely associated with Prof. Milton Friedman of the University of Chicago. The premise is that prosperity is a function of the money pumped into the private banking system by the Federal Reserve Board. The monetarists argue, more on historical grounds than by a show of cause-and-effect evidence, that steady prosperity can be achieved if the Fed expands the money supply by roughly 5 percent per year.

In the past President Nixon has leaned very heavily toward the monetarist. Those of his followers who like to call themselves conservatives are pleased by the emphasis on private banks as against the federal budget, and he himself has been close to Prof. Friedman and his disciples. When announcing his economic plans for this year, however, the President declared, "I am a Keynesian." It was presumed that he would follow an economic policy which mixed the two approaches.

Not All the Way

But it now develops that Mr. Nixon's conversion to Keynesianism was half-hearted indeed—a profession of faith more designed to disarm critics than to govern policy. The amount of administration deliberately cranked into this year's budget was no greater than in the previous year—the year of recession. While there has been some slippage that promises a big budgetary deficit by the end of the year, the reason is mainly decreased tax payments rather than increased outlays.

Moreover, stimulating the economy through the budget requires a parallel policy of holding down wages and prices to guard against inflation. But the Nixon administration has acted only mildly and reluctantly in the wage and price field. The 31 percent pay increase granted by the aluminum companies last week virtually assures a similar increase by the steel companies later this summer. That means the administration cannot seriously dig in on wages and prices until fall at the earliest, and without such a stand-there is little chance of stimulating the economy through budget.

In these circumstances of rampant economic stagflation, Chairman Arthur has met his responsibilities fully.

During the last three years the quantity of money in the economy has been expanded rapidly than in any other period since 1960. But none of the things that are supposed to result from an expanded money have materialized.

Interest Rates

For example, interest rates supposed to drop because of increased availability of funds. But the average yield on grade corporate bonds has been just below 8 percent against just under 7 percent in January.

Business activity is supposed to be stimulated by the availability of more funds for investment. But the latest statistics show businessmen preparing to invest only 27 percent more in plant and equipment this year last—an increase that even keeps up with the rising prices.

Unemployment is supposed to drop because of increased business activity. But in the latest statistics have increased to 6.2 percent—the highest since 1952.

Just why monetary stimulus has not produced the results is an matter for debate. One good guess is that in companies, made nervous by the troubles of Perm Corp. and Lockheed, are using the high rates at high interest to improve their cash position. Another theory is that companies and individuals are holding cash in the expectation of higher rates will rise later on when the Fed ceases the easy-money policy.

Perhaps the most striking condition which is now the monetarist theory has are only temporary. As economy will adjust itself. But it looks more and more that the Keynesian prescription as well as in practice as well as in principle.

Letters

Rap on Meat

It is with great chagrin that I read the Boston Globe's "Rap on Meat" by James Baldwin. Margaret Mead, and I only react to a letter which appeared in the June 4 issue.

I agree with J.B. Durr that Margaret Mead very likely is a racist—albeit, one of the "den" variety which most whites are. We are not to this by our environment and our family ships. Only by constant searching and evaluation words and actions can we root out the ugly racism we accept so thoughtlessly. Miss Mead's age calculation do not allow sort of daily re-evaluation. All anthropologists are free of the taint of racism, as are doctors, lawyers, housewives such as Miss Mead. I do not take my word for "Custer Died for Your Sins" by Vine Deloria Jr.

It is appalling that an educated person would use the words of black women talking, white children in the 5th grade, each other equally. Does not and come white children, it does come from white workers. I am a white nursemaid, when white nursemaids black children! And when color sees it as a high civil right, but accepts it as a normal cost of life in a "global" world.

I too know Mr. Baldwin met him briefly at the Council of Churches 4 months in Uppsala, Sweden. At that time, I knew how I had been touched, horrified, and made to feel sorrowful than I ever had felt after having read "I Am a Man" by James Baldwin. Upon he asked me, "And that my dear, is it?" At which point I felt I had gained a fan for over 40, white, and a per witness to a truly gentle Mr. James Baldwin.

PARIS THEATER Journeying Into Nightmare

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss PARIS, June 9 (IHT).—"Prologue," a new work by Robert Wilson, is having its world premiere at the Espace Pierre Cardin.

To explain the play would be futile. It has neither any spoken words nor the faintest discernible story line. It is devised as a theatrical happening, hopefully to trap the spectator's imagination and to enlist it in a strange, nightmare journey.

The other evening an audience of 100 was invited to attend the preview. Perhaps this log of what took place that night will serve as a record and a guide.

The guests were advised that the spectacle would begin at 8:30. Among those present were Louis Aragon, Mrs. Georges Auric, Mrs. Raymond Cartier, Daniel Gelin, Robert Desnos, Le Monde and Louis Chauvet of Le Figaro. There was also an American contingent, which to judge by its attire did not patronize Cardin, and which strived to keep its conversation at a lofty if precarious cultural level. The evening's first experience was a half-hour wait in the lobby.

Shortly after nine the assembled guests were ushered upstairs and halted at the auditorium doors. Finally, they were admitted, two by two, and escorted to their places in a tier of benches set up at the end of a large, white room that resembled a mosque. At the far end of this low-ceilinged hall stood an altar of cathedral candles, flickering in the semi-darkness. A woman in a golden robe lay motionless on the floor in the candlelight. Bordered the open space, one discerned half a dozen naked men reposing as though they were cadavers awaiting attention in a dissecting chamber. Soft music—now like that of a doleful Indian orchestra in the distance, now like muted church chimes—sounded softly and continued unintermittently through the pageant that followed.

Suddenly, 40 members of the troupe—some nude, some demure and some in flowing garments—appeared in procession, led by a little girl who coaxed them into an interminable waltz. A nun, pierced by an arrow, was wheeled on in a chair and served supper on a tray. In the background of the lengthy dance—which consumed two hours—a woman in black jogging, cut off and raced back and forth.

The initial pantomime concluded as mysteriously as it had begun, but no intermission delayed the proceedings. Now, members of the audience were requested to leave their seats and squat on the floor about a wooden platform. On this platform, a house was slowly constructed, this business requiring 45 minutes. Once the house was up four men carrying blank banners came forth and held up their empty flags on which was projected a film depicting a black woman stabbing a little boy.

It was after midnight, but there was no rest for the weary and no means of escape. The audience was now ushered downstairs through the dressing rooms where one saw again the pierced nun, while naked men and women lay stretched in the corridors. Through the windows one could observe a regiment of the company standing at attention in the street and outside the main entrance (which was locked) a man writhed in a straitjacket. Other actors had struck poses as wax dummies of shop windows on roped-off staircases. In the foyer, the dark-clad runner now raced before the former bar.

The tired first-nighters were

Art in Spain A Hanging Museum for Abstracts

By Max Wykes-Joyce

CUENCA (IHT).—Tucked away in the mountains three hours' drive from Madrid on the road to Valencia lies one of the most imaginatively displayed art collections in the world. Fathered by the Filipino artist Fernando Zobel, who was distressed to see most of the finest examples of Spanish abstract art being sold abroad, he decided, 15 years ago, to build up a selection of the work of some of his contemporaries, most of whom were also his friends.

The importance of the collection came to be such that Zobel wished to make it available to the public. The problem then arose of how and where best to display it. He and his friends searched the winter of 1962 in Toledo, searching without success for the right setting. By chance one evening in the following June, dining with some fellow artists, Zobel mentioned his efforts in Toledo. One of those present, Gustavo Torner, pointed out that the famous hanging houses of his native Cuenca were being extensively renovated, and that as yet the city council had not decided to what use they were to be put.

A visit to Cuenca convinced that the hanging houses fulfilled the concept's requirement. A deal was concluded between the city and Zobel, and the project was under way. The museum opened in June, 1966.

Cuenca stands perched on a rock in a dramatic landscape separated from the surrounding mountains and caves by two deep river gorges, a natural fortress used since Moorish times. It had great importance as a wool center during the Renaissance. After this, its influence and population steadily declined, and the hanging houses fell into disuse and disrepair.

They are a fine example of Gothic folk building. A basic framework of pine and plaster has the renowned medieval facade of stonework and iron grills, and, at the backs of the houses, the dramatic balconies hang out over the gorge, providing a focal view for and from many miles.

To return to the collection—"abstract" is interpreted in the broadest sense of "non-figurative"; and the collection, based on quality rather than breadth of representation, focuses on the best works of internationally acknowledged Spanish artists, such as Tapies, Tharrats, Cullar, Torner, Sempere, Chillida, Canogar, Saura, Saez, Fetto, Serano and Zobel himself. It might be said to carry on the tradition initiated by Picasso, Gris and Miró. No attempt has been made to include every Spanish abstract artist, nor does the collection pretend to be a historical survey of abstract art in Spain.

At present, the collection, which is continually growing, consists of some hundred paintings, over 300 drawings and graphics, a dozen or so large sculptures, and illustrated books and manuscripts. Only a few works at a time are on show, so that each piece has optimum light and breathing space, and there are never more than two or three to a room.

In addition to the splendid museum, there is an extensive library on Spanish abstract art with photographs and slides, a projection room, a graphic workshop with etching press available to qualified artists, a limited number of scholarships which tie in with the operation and maintenance of the museum, and even a restaurant well known for its regional dishes.

Dining Out in Paris

Specializing in Bouillabaisse

By Jon Winthro

PARIS, June 9 (IHT).—ANY restaurant that can serve the same menu twice a day, summer and winter, for 20 years and still draw a crowd must have something going for it.

At Chez Quinson the something is bouillabaisse. Many people swear it's the best in Paris and Raymond Quinson has a couple of American clients who agree. Every year they make a trip to Paris and they invariably reserve their table before they leave the United States.

The restaurant has a few other things going for it, too, including other tasty dishes. It is a typical bistro, the service is friendly and efficient (at 12 percent), the wine is good and best of all, prices are reasonable for the quality.

There are a number of hors d'oeuvre and a fair variety of main dishes, including grilled cut of meat, but as Mr. Quinson puts it, "If you come here and ask for a steak with French fries, you will make the patron sick."

Stick to the Provençal specialties and everybody will be happy. Mr. Quinson is from the Var department and that is where the rich pâté de grive (thrush) also comes from.

He gets all the herbs for his bouillabaisse from Provence. He has a man down there who gathers them at the right moment (August, for most of them), dries them and ships a year's supply to Paris all at once. Mr. Quinson uses something like a quarter ton of garlic a year and equally impressive amounts of thyme, bay leaf, fennel, saffron and red pepper.

All these, plus tomatoes, onions, parsley, olive oil and six kinds of fish make up this divine dish; around Marseilles divine origins really are claimed for bouillabaisse.

You can add lobster to it, but it is essentially a fisherman's dish intended to make use of whatever did not get sold any given day. I prefer it without lobster, but it's a matter of taste.

However you eat it, taste is one thing you don't have to worry about with John Dory, conger eel, weever, angler, haggis and red gurnard, plus mussels and swimming crabs, toast with rouille, a garlic, red pepper and olive oil sauce.

To go with it, drink the white or rose Cassis (at 9 francs a bottle), a fine Provençal wine made just outside of Marseilles. The rose is pleasant but the white is elegant with considerable fineness and character. At the end of the meal try the remarkable fruitily macé de Provence or the excellent pear brandy.

That's about enough for one day, but the next time try the rouille (red muller) or leup (sea bass) grilled with fennel.

Chez Quinson, 5 Place Etienne Perret, Paris 15. Reservations a must (532-48-54). Closed Sunday, Mondays and from the last week of July through the second week of September. 30 to 40 francs (53.45-7.25), including wine and service.

Music in Berlin

A Verdi Revival

By Paul Moor

BERLIN, June 9 (IHT).—"Read De l'Allemagne" by Mme. de Staël, wrote Giuseppe Verdi on May 4, 1864, to F. M. Piave, who had already written two librettos for Verdi—and, perhaps even more important, got them past the censorship maintained by Italy's Austrian-French occupation.

In particular Verdi brought to Piave's attention a German romantic drama warmly praised by Mme. de Staël, Friedrich Ludwig Zacharias Werner's "Attila, or the King of the Huns." Werner, whom Goethe esteemed, had written his play as a protest against the aggression of Napoleon. Verdi saw in it the possibility of an operatic protest against his beloved Italy's lack of freedom.

Verdi's opera lies chronologically between "Ermani" and "Macbeth" but it gets performed the least frequently of the three. A temperamental revival of this rarity at the Deutsche Oper Berlin has now perhaps given it a new lease on life. Judging from the shouting ovations the audience began according to it even before the end of the prologue, the work holds far more interest for modern audiences than anyone might have thought.

Tito Capobianco, the young Argentine stage director whose name one associates with the New York City Opera, chose his own "new version" of Verdi's work for his Berlin debut. The unfamiliarity of the original makes it impossible to ascertain to just what extent Mr. Capobianco has monkeyed with it. At the world premiere in Venice's glorious old Phoenix Theatre on March 17, 1866, the audience cheered the prologue, applauded much of the rest of the work, but had begun hissing by the end of the last act. Whatever dramaturgical tinkering Mr. Capobianco may have undertaken seems to have worked out to the opera's advantage.

The libretto departs from historical fact whenever that seems to have got in the way. The correspondence between Verdi and his two librettists the turned to Piave after Temistocle Solera suddenly stopped writing; shows a lightheartedness about documentary fact which evokes memories of Hollywood in its heyday. Werner's Hildegunde of Burgundy understandably became Hildegonda, but then mysteriously turned up subsequently as Odabella, daughter of an Aquileian prince. Foresto, during the course of the opera's creation, metamorphosed from her brother into her lover. Verdi, in this case, clearly regarded his libretto as little more than a peg to hang an opera on.

The rich, creamy voice of Giuseppina Janowitz dominates this production, but she shows painfully little acting ability. Her extraordinarily opulent singing more than once stopped the show, but when, for instance, she stood on a step and with both hands brought her sword down vertically into Attila's breast, she did it with all the dramatic force of a farm woman at a churn. José van Dam as Attila, Ingvar Wixell as Ezio, and Franco Tagliavini as Foresto contributed splendid vocal and theatrical performances, and Wen Hsu Wu and Beorg Rungden stood out in the smaller roles of Attila's slave Uldino and Pope Leo. Giuseppe Patané conducted with unremitting brio and contributed much towards the evening's enormous audience success.

Swiss to Halt Interest On Foreign Deposits

BERN, June 9 (AP)—Switzerland is to stop interest payments on foreign currency deposits, Finance Minister Nello Celio announced today.

He said the decision will be formalized next week in a voluntary agreement between the Swiss national bank and the private banks.

It is expected that the move will encourage an outflow of dollars which accumulated in Switzerland during the recent dollar-mark crisis and also discourage future inflows or "hot" money.

The finance minister also said bank reserve requirements would be introduced to isolate any additional incoming funds at the Swiss national bank. He indicated that the minimum requirement would be 100 percent.

Provision for minimum reserve requirements was established under a 1969 agreement between the bankers association and the central bank that also set ceilings on bank lending. The provision so far, however, has never been used.

Bankers explained that it would probably apply only to an increase in foreign deposits from a specified date rather than to the total amount of foreign deposits.

Mr. Celio, speaking to the upper house of Parliament, did not say exactly when next week the accord would go into effect.

indicating there were still some details to be completed. However, banking sources confirmed that discussions concerning the credit restraint measures were in an advanced stage.

A banker commented that when interest payments on foreign accounts were temporarily banned in 1964, the measure had only limited success in restraining inflow of funds. Essentially it is up to each bank to determine what is a foreign account, he said, but often it is difficult to identify them correctly.

The pending measures are designed mainly to encourage repatriation of funds that entered Switzerland in anticipation of the May 10 revaluation. To the surprise of many Swiss officials, there was relatively little profit-taking on the revaluation. More than $1 billion had entered since the beginning of April as remained, bankers estimated.

Profits Rise At Montedison After Writeoff

MILAN, June 9 (AP)—Montedison directors reported today that the group posted a profit of 47.3 billion lire ($7.7 million) last year, compared with a profit of 41.374 billion lire in 1969.

However, the profit is reported only after a writeoff of 60.5 billion lire, the directors added.

A Montedison spokesman declined to clarify the communiqué issued by the directors, saying that one of the company's financial officers would have to do that.

Earlier today, directors decided by a reported 23-to-2 vote not to pay a dividend for 1970.

The two opposing directors argued that the dividend should be paid out of published reserves of 200 billion lire ($320 million), one official said.

With 749 million shares outstanding, maintaining the recent dividend level of 50 lire a share would cost 37.45 billion lire.

However, the majority held that it would be "improper" to distribute a dividend from reserves that might be needed for other purposes in a time of general economic downturn, one director said.

The dividends then suggested that perhaps the reserves were not as high as published.

Directors called the annual meeting for June 30 in Milan. At that time, the dissidents said, management should explain in detail the exact state of the reserves.

The dividend omission has long been expected in Italian business circles.

Montedison has been through constant management disputes during the past 18 months, a period in which the government has broadened its interest in the firm through two state holding companies.

Trade Pattern Is Shifting in Soviet Union

Import of Consumer Items Up, Exports Off

By Theodore Shabad
MOSCOW, June 9 (NYT)—Soviet foreign trade figures made public today confirmed a reported trend to increase the import of consumer goods as part of an effort to raise the domestic standard of living.

Trade figures for 1970 published in the economic weekly Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta also showed a decline in the export of consumer items with a view to making more available to the internal market.

For decades Soviet economic planners have given priority to the development of heavy industry as a defense needs while consumer goods levels were maintained far below the standards of other industrialized nations.

The current five-year plan (1971-75), endorsed by the Communist Party's 24th congress in April, has been presented by Soviet spokesmen as a turning point in favor of the consumer.

Sign of New Policy
Although only about 5 to 10 percent of the nation's consumer goods needs are met by imports and the shift in trade patterns last year was relatively slight, it was evident that a new policy had begun to operate.

The economic weekly disclosed that the share of consumer goods in the total value of imports rose to 38.1 percent last year from 36.2 percent in 1969. At the same time the share of consumer goods in total exports fell to 12.2 from 14.7 percent.

Apparel imports, which had been relatively steady in previous years, rose to 699 million rubles last year from 614 million rubles in 1969. One ruble is $1.11 at the official rate of exchange.

The value of imported furniture, another important item, rose to 178 million rubles from 168 million and leather shoes to 61 million pairs from 57 million.

Taking advantage of its trade ties with developing countries, the Soviet Union has also been increasing imports of tropical and subtropical fruits, long a rarity in this country, as well as coffee, cacao beans and tea.

However, some traditional high-value Soviet exports, such as caviar and crabmeat, continue at a high level, and are virtually unavailable here.

SYMBOLIC START—Norwegian Premier Trygve Bratteli unveils a plaque today at the Phillips Group oil test platform "Gulfide" in the Ekofisk North Sea field. Production is to start Monday.

West Europe's Biggest Oil Field Officially Launched

OSLO, June 9 (AP)—Norwegian Prime Minister Trygve Bratteli officially opened Western Europe's biggest oil field today located in the center of the storm-tossed North Sea.

Only 24 guests, ferried by helicopters, were invited to the production platform, about 185 miles (300 kilometers) southwest of Stavanger, for the ceremony marking Norway's entry into the oil-producing business and Western Europe's first step toward fuel independence.

Production of the Phillips Petroleum group project in the Ekofisk field starts at 40,000 barrels a day. A gradual increase of production from 30 additional wells is expected to reach a total of about 300,000 barrels a day by the end of 1973, a flow comparable to the richest Middle East wells.

Other promising fields have been located nearby.

As far as oil is concerned, the North Sea discoveries so far will not upset the balance of oil reserves in the world—reserves will still be heavily weighted towards the Middle East—but they will have a tremendous value to Europe as a politically safe supply.

W.W. Dunn, Phillips vice-president said, "When full production is reached it is expected a pipeline will link the field to a shore terminal. Meanwhile the oil will be transported to a refinery at Risavika, near Stavanger, by oil tankers. The construction of a one-million-barrel underwater storage tank is planned near Stavanger.

The underwater tank will enable offloading when bad weather prevents tankers from landing off shore.

The group consists of Phillips, with a 36.96 percent interest; Petrofina of Belgium, 30 percent; Petronord of France, 20 percent and Agip of Italy with 13.04 percent.

The group has estimated it will cost some $400 million to fully develop the Ekofisk field. Present investment in the North Sea by international oil groups exceeds $1 billion.

Proxy Fight at IOS Eyed By Preferred Shareholders

By Robert E. Dallos and Paul E. Steiger

LOS ANGELES, June 9.—There are new rumblings about a possible proxy fight for control of IOS Ltd.

Bernard Cornfield, who founded IOS but was ousted from control during the company's troubles last year, has confirmed in London that certain preferred shareholders of IOS are considering mounting a takeover battle at the annual meeting in Toronto June 30.

Such an effort would seek to frustrate the plans of the present IOS chairman, Robert Vesco, to consolidate control over IOS by himself and his International Controls Corp. (ICC) headquartered in New Jersey.

"Ball Game Isn't Over"
"The ball game isn't over yet," Mr. Cornfield declared, noting that while ICC currently has about seven million, or 17 percent, of the 40.4 million IOS preferred shares outstanding, the shareholders who have expressed an interest in a takeover hold more than that.

He did not specify the size of their holdings or reveal their names, but it is believed the list would include some present or former IOS executives, salesmen and managers still loyal to Mr. Cornfield.

At the annual meeting, the holders of preferred stock will be entitled to elect two-thirds of the directors to serve for the ensuing year. Holders of the 13.9 million common shares outstanding will elect the remaining members of the board.

Cornfield to Attend
Mr. Cornfield, who said he plans to attend the meeting, acknowledged that he no longer owns any IOS preferred stock, although he does own 200,000 common shares.

He said he sold his six million preferred shares last winter to "a major European banking concern." He declined to identify the bank, but he said that he had been told that the bank was "warehousing" the shares for Mr. Vesco and ICC.

In an earlier interview, Mr. Vesco noted that his control of IOS currently rests mainly on ICC's position as a creditor, not its position as a shareholder.

ICC has a $5 million loan outstanding to IOS, plus an agreement under which IOS must, under certain conditions, buy from ICC at $1.20 each up to three million warrants to buy IOS stock.

At present, Mr. Vesco said, IOS's financial condition is "strained—unless we ease our position as a creditor."

Mr. Vesco also said that he, too, has heard the rumblings about a possible proxy fight at the Toronto meeting.

"But if anybody is sitting up all night thinking about starting a proxy fight," he added, "he should know that should unforeseen stumbling blocks arise to block our program for IOS, we expect to enforce all our rights as a creditor."

IOS Unit Plans Name Change
TORONTO, June 9 (AP)—Shareholders of IOS Management Ltd. will be asked at the annual meeting to approve a name change to Transglobal Financial Services Ltd.

Holdings also will be asked to approve the previously proposed purchase of certain assets from parent IOS Ltd., a move which will enable IOS Management to operate independently of IOS.

Though there are extensive legal contingencies, the purchase price, not reported earlier, will be in the form of an operating bond of $8.718 million and a sales bond of $2,967 million. Both will bear interest at 6 percent and mature Dec. 31, 1977. The total price is about the value of the assets carried on the books of IOS Ltd. on Dec. 31, 1970.

U.S. Seeks Ways to End Tax Evasion

Treasury Plans New Record Requirements

WASHINGTON, June 9 (AP)—The Treasury proposed today a broad set of new financial record-keeping requirements intended mainly to reduce tax evasion and other illegal activities through use of secret foreign bank accounts.

For individuals, the proposals would require an immediate report to the Customs Bureau each time currency or other monetary instruments exceeding $5,000 are moved out of the country.

Much more extensive reporting would be imposed on banks, savings and loan associations, securities and commodities dealers and credit unions. Banks would have to keep a copy of every paid check, regardless of amount or destination, for six years, and all financial institutions would have to keep available records of any credit extension of more than $1,000.

The Treasury set July 13 as the deadline for comment on the proposals, which would implement the foreign bank secrecy law passed by Congress last October.

The proposed regulations also set penalties for violations ranging from civil penalties of up to $500 to criminal penalties involving fines of $50,000 and prison terms of up to five years.

Glamours Gain Amid Overall New York Fall

By Terry Robards
Internal restructuring of operations. Chromalloy, which said it plans to acquire two firms for an undisclosed amount of cash and deferred payments, eased 3/8 to 19 1/8.

Alberto-Culver sagged 1 7/8 to 34 5/8. The company said its third-quarter earnings will be lower than last year.

Raytheon announced plans for a $50 million offering of sinking fund debentures and eased 1/4 to 38 1/4.

Silver issues went against the market's declining trend. Sun-shine Mining rose 3/8 to 13. Ecels Mining 3/8 to 22 3/8 and U.S. Smelting & Refining 3/4 to 28 1/2. Commodities analysts note that silver bullion prices have been rising recently.

On the American Stock Exchange, prices were slightly lower with the exchange index off 0.04.

Glamours Bounce
Glamour issues once again were caught up in selling, but they bounced back. Bellwether IBM, which had fallen 1 1/4 in the week's first two sessions, sank to a new 1971 low of 308 before rebounding sharply to close with a gain of 3 1/4 at 318 1/4.

Similar action cropped up in the new computer stocks. Control Data closed with a gain of 1 1/4. Burroughs was up 1 7/8 and Honeywell climbed 1 1/4.

General Electric, whose 2-for-1 split became effective yesterday, eased 1/8, closing at 59 1/2.

Polaroid leaped 6 1/4 to close at 114 3/4, after reaching a new 1971 high of 115 1/2 earlier in the session. The company disclosed plans to introduce a new camera and lower-cost film that will turn out instant color photographs for about the same price as conventional color pictures. Eastman Kodak, the leader in the conventional-picture field, slipped 1/8 to 52.

Kinney Services went through a trading lull and then closed up 1/2 at 36 1/2 after announcing plans to sell its funeral chapels to Servico for more than $35 million in cash, notes and stock. Kinney also disclosed an

Bache Profit Sets Record

NEW YORK, June 9 (NYT)—Bache & Co. reported yesterday that its profits for the three months ended April 30 constituted a record for any quarter and was a sharp contrast to the year-to-year loss.

The nation's second-largest brokerage house said that net earnings for the quarter amounted to $6.59 million. The year-to-year loss was $4.77 million.

This performance reflects the general improvement on Wall Street since the long bear market came to an end 12 months ago.

Bache attributed its improved position to "strong and effective" internal control measures, the introduction of the $15 stock transaction surcharge and the change in the country's economic climate as reflected in the securities markets.

The only larger brokerage house, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith recorded a pretax profit of $50.05 million in its quarter ended March 26, up from $19.54 million in the 1970 period.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

Those who take the traditional side of the four-or-five-card major controversy have a rare but useful by-product of their methods. A bid in a four-card major sometimes "steals" the opponent's suit. It did so on the diagramed deal played in the 1971 Vanderbilt Cup contest.

The North-South partnership was using the Blue team club system, but this did not affect the auction to any extent. No conventions were used, and two American experts using four-card major openings might easily make the same bids. North's ruse to three diamonds at his second turn was on the aggressive side. He tried to apply the brakes at the four level, but South was not interested in a part-score.

Notice that South's opening bid "stole" West's suit, and that player was no longer interested in bidding his long, strong hearts.

West led the club ten, which was ducked around to the ace. At the second trick, South played the heart queen, and West led low nonchalantly. He hoped South would ruff, but South discarded a spade from dummy. He was mildly surprised to find he had won the trick. He was expecting to avoid a spade loser by ruffing out a high heart honor from the West hand later, but as it turned out he had avoided a heart loser.

The heart jack was led, and this time West covered and dummy ruffed. The club queen was led, and East covered with the king and South ruffed. The diamond ace followed, collecting the queen, and the declarer was well-placed. He ruffed a heart, returned to his hand with a spade lead to the king, and ruffed his last heart with the diamond ten. If East had overruffed with the diamond king, the declarer would automatically make 12 tricks by discarding his spade loser on the club jack. So East discarded the spade queen instead. When the diamond ten held, South ruffed a small club and led the diamond jack. The defense now could never make more than one trick and North-South scored 420.

In the other room, North-South doubled three hearts and collected 300.

CONSUMING PASSIONS
A Historic Inquiry Into Certain English Appetites
By Philippa Fullar. Illustrated. Little Brown, 274 pp.
Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

As long as there is history, people will go on dreaming up new ways to look at it. I guess: although often enough what seems at first an original and amusing approach—the toy in history, or history as revealed by tastes in household pets, turns out to be an awful bore in the reading. Philippa Fullar's interest in food, it seems—she has a Cordun Bleu Certificate of Cookery and has been manager of a restaurant. (Also, she likes guinea pigs, Greek dancing, Italy, judge making and cats, and is a fellow of the Royal Horticultural Society.) She has set about in her witty titled book, "Consuming Passions," to view the history of England from ancient times through its eating habits. And, exceptionally, her book turns out to be just as entertaining as her approach.

I'm not certain why this should be, aside from the fact that Mrs. Fullar is a graceful and witty writer. It is not as if one was dying to learn how English cooking arrived at its present low esteem (I'm quite fond of it myself) but I consider that one of my aberrations. Possibly I had an edge of appetite while I read it and unconsciously savored the bits of pudding and the jelly for Tracylee Roby Poy. Possibly too, it amused me to learn the origins of hot cross buns and umble-pie.

More likely, Mrs. Fullar succeeds because she has stretched the definition of human appetite to its broadest possible meaning and written a chronicle of taste, desire, concupiscence and consumption. At any rate, starting off with the Epicurean origins, which, according to her, formed part of the background of English eating habits, I fairly bled up her history, and felt sad at the end when I learned that the demand for mutton in England has now all but disappeared.

Mrs. Fullar's approach is basically simple: She has briefly surveyed English history from its "Roman Spring" to the present, concentrating on those episodes and documents that concern sensual appetite and gastric juices. True, she leans heavily at the well-known literature, attending Roman dinner parties through the eyes of Petronius and Pity the Younger, viewing medieval English village life through the words of William Langland, cutting up a Twelfth Night Cake with Pepys, listening in on Dr. Johnson's dinner talk with Boswell and recalling Edwardian breakfasts with J. B. Priestley.

But this is by no means exclusively a book of twice-told tales. The author has tested recipes all the way back to those from the only classical Roman recipe book known to us, and she has traced the practical evolution of English cooking through a le apperit. She offers the eating conclusion that, on the opinion of scholars, have been put off by using its vocabulary and vague its specifications. Roman medieval English cookery was at all unpalatable, but as of a high culinary order.

And she has her theory how English cooking got to it is today. In large part, the Church that was at the Middle Ages was seen by European, originating its classical Roman sources, as ill to Italian and French ery. But the dissolution of the monasteries in the 14th century that lent its share to VIII's break with Rome to disintegrate the Middle and to change the diet as has the mobility. European to English. The tan revolution completed it and produced "the British of cooking: plain fare with quire no imagination." "It interesting conjecture," Mrs. Fullar continues, "that had been for this Puritan, the English tradition might blossomed as richly as it the French."

An interesting conjecture but it seems futile to blame. For as Mrs. Fullar contrasts throughout her English cooking developed; the English themselves, such a way that in the 18th century, the object of eating-humor the humour; in its century, one went to any to avoid an excess of spleen in the 18th century, eat caustic functional, the stomach mechanism, and food the tion of a utilitarian-world wherein one might counter at supper "a light made out of root-cakes as in the midst of a temperate, or trifle."

But perhaps your interest neither in cooking nor in history? Would it then be the bizarre appetites of to learn how in the late 19th century "Umsa—the most skulls of criminals that hanged and exposed in ch was declared a sovereign for many diseases"? Or the Johnson was supposed to received the bad eye-gest scrupula that scarred at dressed him all his life if unsuspected wet-nurse? May but the point I am actu ing to make is that Philip lar has cast a narrow a English history and pulls surprisingly varied catch.

Letter Can Get Pancho on Cup Team

NEW YORK, June 9 (AP).—Pancho Gonzales, 43, can return to the U.S. Davis Cup team for the first time in 23 years if he'll just sit down and write a letter.

MacCall Pancho claims his contract was not transferable. "We have advised Sweden, Hunt and Pancho that if he writes us that he is no longer a contract pro, we will honor his request to try out for the Davis Cup."

ILTF Accused By Judy Dalton Of Unfairness

NOTTINGHAM, England, June 9 (UPI).—Australia's Judy Dalton today accused the International Lawn Tennis Federation of unfair treatment and said she was being made the scapegoat for withdrawals from the French open in Paris.

Mrs. Dalton learned today she was the seventh player to be suspended by the ILTF for passing up the French Open. The other six, who were suspended Saturday are: Nicki Pilek of Yugoslavia, Tom Okker of the Netherlands, Egypt's Ismail El Shafiq, plus Germans Ingo Buding, Helga Masthof-Niessen and Helga Hoel.

He learned quite a bit from the fight and that Duran gave me problems until the end. Duran is fantastic. "What exactly did you learn?" Bouttier was asked and he answered, "A little of everything."

Bouttier came to Paris when he was 18 to learn to be a butcher and later worked as a chef. He has 84 bouts. Last night he gained his 50th victory. Bouttier disagrees with the record books. He insists he has 81 victories. He has lost three times and had one draw.

Bouttier Floors Duran 3 Times To Gain European Fight Title

PARIS, June 9 (UPI).—Jean-Claude Bouttier's work was better than Carlos Duran's leg work and the Frenchman danced away with middleweight championship of Europe.

Bouttier knocked down champion Duran three times. Each time he got up and twisted and turned his long torso and has bounced off the ropes and one and two and twisted and turned and bounced. The movement did not impress the judges enough and Bouttier won an unanimous 15-round decision outdoors at the Roland Garros Stadium.

The judges scored the fight: 73-67, 71-69 and 71-67. The Herald Tribune had it 74-66 for Bouttier.

Whatever points Duran scored he did with his legwork. It is hard to score points by not throwing punches, which is what Duran did. From a half minute before Duran, a naturalized Italian who was born in Buenos Aires, threw a punch. But what legwork! Especially for a man who is going to be 36 next week.

The Comeback of Luis Miguel Dominguin

MADRID (HT)—Today the great bullfighter Luis Miguel Dominguin will make his comeback in the Canary Islands. After a few more days of what amounts to out-of-town tryouts, he will first fight on the Spanish mainland, at Alicante, on June 24.

The gifts bullfighting requires range from a man's brass to a priest's dedication. Fear is essential: "It is like a drug," Dominguin says. "Fear makes you think you'll die. For that reason each minute has more intensity. It is a kind of purification."

During this summer he will fight at least 60 times in Spain, averaging one corrida a day. On July 14 he will fight in Arles, Luis Miguel Dominguin is 45 years old and has not appeared in the bull ring for ten years.

three children. Financial need and the starting of a new life—Dominguin is often seen with a beautiful blonde named Maria whom friends refer to as his wife—have been cited as reasons why Dominguin is returning to the ring.

The next bull weighs 850 kilos and charges out with fierce energy. The atmosphere changes: Without music, crowds, or banderillas, Dominguin in his blue sneakers and sweatshirt begins his horrible work, moving in closer and closer, insanely close, spellbinding, working it seems with the bull who collaborates in his own death.

as the illusion of coming back," he says, stressing the word "illusion." His training consists of walking, running backwards, playing pelota and fighting bulls. He started his training in February, injured his knee and had it operated on in March. He will have had only about three weeks full training before his first fight.

During his ten-year retirement Dominguin dabbled in export-import and was an ornament of the jet set. He is separated from his Italian wife, who has possession of his big house outside Madrid and their second bull? In all the days I've been training, I never had a good one. The minute this one came out I knew he was good and my confidence came back. The chauffeur has been dismissed and Dominguin drives his car, a modest green SEAT, expertly and daintily back into town. His sweatshirt is bloodstained. In the trunk of the green SEAT an aide has put the bull's testicles. They are, it is said, a great delicacy.

PEOPLE: Notes From the Far Side

Picking up where we left off yesterday: "The inimitable Eolly Massee originally told me this one," writes Jack Massee, of Paris: "A father is driving his son to school. A car hits them, killing the father instantly and seriously injuring the son, who is rushed to an operating room. The surgeon enters, looks at the boy and says: 'I can't operate on him. He's my son.' How can this be?"

This, again, is what is meant by 'betting your bottom dollar.'"
